

From

Comrades In Arms

There was a funny smell in the air and once or twice I got a faint whiff of rotten meat. It was known that the Hercules was used to carry troops and equipment and was a great workhorse for going into a battle. For that reason I knew it was also used to casvac the injured or at the worst returning the dead back to the UK for burial. I don't know if it was the smell of the dead but there was something not right with us going into a combat zone inside a large hearse.